

Looking after YOUNG Mouths

Why do we need teeth?

To chew

To smile

To speak

Teething

Baby's teeth will start to grow when they are about 6 months old. Your baby should have all their teeth by about 2 years of age.

When your baby is teething there is some pain. To stop the pain let the baby chew on something like a teething ring or a clean toothbrush.

Breastfeeding

Breast milk is good for your baby. Breast milk helps build strong and healthy teeth.

Bottle feeding

Sugary drinks in bottles cause holes in baby's teeth. The sugar helps bacteria to rot the teeth.

Do not put baby to bed with a bottle.

Only put water or milk in bottles.

Bottle Feeding

These drinks make holes in baby's teeth.

Using dummies

Sugary foods put on dummies will also cause holes in the teeth. Do not put jam or honey on the dummy.

Everyday Foods

Healthy everyday foods help grow strong teeth.
These foods are friendly foods for your baby.

How to clean baby teeth

Cleaning baby's teeth will help get rid of germs that make holes in teeth. You should clean both your own teeth and baby's teeth in the morning and at night.

You need to clean baby's teeth as soon as they grow. To clean baby's teeth, use a cloth or a small, soft toothbrush. Make sure you clean all sides of the tooth.

Cleaning toddler's teeth

Once the child is 2 years old, you can use a child's fluoride toothpaste to help get rid of the germs and make teeth strong. Use only a very small amount of toothpaste on the toothbrush to clean teeth.

An adult should help the child with cleaning their teeth until they are about 9 years of age.

Visiting your Dental Clinic

If you or your baby have a toothache — see a dentist or health worker straight away.

See your dental clinic or community health staff when baby is 6 months old for a checkup. After the checkup, have regular dental checks every year.

Even if you have no pain, you and your baby should see your health worker, dental therapist or dentist at least once a year. Pick a time to remember, like when school starts each year.

Remember

To stop your teeth from getting holes:
